From Invisible Man to Visible Men

The plight of black boys and men in America is well-chronicled. We are overrepresented in unfavorable statistics such as life expectancy, overall health, crime, education, and poverty and, we are grossly underrepresented in nearly all measures of success. The experiences of black men and boys have largely been shaped by struggles, tragic history, and strife. The media focuses on negative outcomes versus tapping into the wealth of black men and boys who are using their gifts in profoundly positive ways.

Neil tells a different story.

This presentation contradicts the statistics and highlights accomplished black men who are wonderful contributors to their families, professions, and communities. These are men who continually overcome obstacles on their paths to success and achievement. These men are magnificent role models for our children, black and otherwise, to emulate.

Sadly, too many of these men are invisible in our society. This presentation changes that invisibility to visibility.

Attendees will truly SEE these men for their inherent value to society and their deep and positive contribution to the fabric of their families and communities.

This talk will change the narrative on black boys and men and offer:

- A new, more complete story of black men and boys and their rightful place in America
- An expansive and hopeful narrative on the nature, character, and potential of black boys and men
- A momentous elevation of black boys and men and the specific actions that support this rise
- Concrete ways to advocate for black boys and men
- Raised expectations of performance within our organizations and beyond
- A vision for what is possible
- An atmosphere that inspires confidence
- Heightened awareness of personal success, and
- A way to identify and measure positive outcomes within this population

Join us and you, too, will see. The future of black boys and men is bright and you can be a meaningful part of it.
